

Avondale Washburn Marker Project: Honoring Victims of the Avondale Mine Disaster

by Rick Sedlisky

The Avondale Mine Disaster that took place at Plymouth, PA on September 6, 1869 remains the worst mining disaster in the history of the United States. Of the 110 men and boys who gave their lives at Avondale, 58 are laid to rest at Washburn Cemetery in West Scranton, with 54 in the part of the cemetery unofficially known as the Avondale Section. The other four are laid to rest nearby.

Throughout recent years, Washburn Cemetery has been the target of vandalism, marker desecration and neglect. Avondale men and boys' markers were not spared. Many of the nearly 150 year old markers were split in half, toppled from their foundations and left to whatever fate had in store for them.

More than ten years ago, through efforts led by Ms. Linda Scott and others, funds were raised and volunteers with various types of professional expertise joined the effort to repair the markers and restore them to their respective locations.

Time and Mother Nature have not been kind to the Avondale men and boys' markers to the point where much of the lettering on many markers is now illegible, leaving the possibility of the identities of some laid to rest at Washburn becoming lost to time. Realizing such a possibility, the Avondale Washburn Remembrance Committee, consisting of Torry Watkins, Robert Wolensky and Rick Sedlisky was formed.

Plans were formulated and bids sought to place a permanent marker that will preserve the victims' identities for generations to come.

The permanent bronze marker will contain the names of the 54 men and boys at the Avondale Section, as well as the names of the four others laid to rest nearby. The bronze marker will be mounted on a granite stone and placed below the center row of graves near the historical marker that rises

The majority of the Avondale men and boys' gravesites at Washburn are in three rows. The marker rendering on page 8, designed by Pesavento Monuments Cont. on pg. 8

A Word from the President...

Hello Everyone,

Finally, the weather is improving and we are in step to move into summer. This issue of our newsletter to members tells a great deal about summer events going on at the Society. Thanks to all of you who were able to attend the many LHS activities in April and May. I hope we continue to see active member involvement and I especially want to encourage you to mark your calendar for Sunday, June 25, 2017. That is the scheduled date for the Historic Hill House Tour. Held every other year, it is a great event that draws attention to the rich history seen in Scranton's hill section, its beautiful landscapes and stately architecture. I am most grateful to the homeowners who are participating this year, for their willingness to open their homes for the tour. This program, one of the Society's biggest fundraising events, is detailed in this issue, be sure to look into it!

Speaking of successful fundraisers, I want to draw attention to our monthly "Dine Lackawanna" night out to area restaurants. The many businesses that have participated, some more than once, contribute a portion of the evening's proceeds back to LHS as a donation. Throughout the year the generosity of both owners and patrons add much financial support to our organization. It has become a monthly tradition when many of our members and supporters gather together for a most pleasant evening.

Lastly, I want to say "Happy Birthday" to our executive director Mary Ann Savakinus and our assistant director Sarah Piccini, both of whom recently celebrated birthdays with great style. Best wishes ladies!

Stay well and stay involved,
Michael Gilmartin

June Lectures at LHS

Learn about the past and the present at the Lackawanna Historical Society this month! On Sunday, June 11, at 2 p.m., join us for a presentation about the history of Clarks Summit, one of the earliest settlements in the Lackawanna Valley.

The program will be based on the recently revised and updated book Clarks Summit: A Narrative, originally written in 1986 by John & Helen Villaume. Authors include Warren Watkins, Charlie Kumpas, Dennis Martin, and Shirley Eagen, and we are excited that some of them will be here to discuss the borough's early settlers and the development of its longstanding organizations and institutions. Copies of the book will be available for purchase.

If you like a little science with your history, stop by on Sunday, June 18 at 2 p.m. to learn about Dr. Charles David Keeling, a climatologist from Scranton. Keeling, who died in 2005, spent decades meticulously measuring the atmospheric concentration of greenhouse gas carbon dioxide and developed the "Keeling Curve" by plotting concentration levels over time. These measurements form the basis of the threat to earth's climate, as carbon dioxide traps some of the out-going radiation, increasing the Earth's temperature. In 2002, Keeling was awarded the National Medal of Science for his work, just one of several honors he received.

"Building Cartoons" on Exhibit at Catlin House

Retired architect and Clarks Summit resident Lou Shapiro will be displaying his artwork at the Catlin House this summer.

Shortly after retiring, Mr. Shapiro began doing rough pencil sketches of local buildings, a skill he learned when he was a student in Florence, Italy in the 1960s. In time, he developed a style of his own and completed more than 70 sketches. He started in pencil but by 2016 was producing full color drawings using high grade markers, not typically used for that type of work. Because of the color and loose style, he referred to his earlier work as "building cartoons" but feels his more recent creations offer significantly more detail. Twelve pieces of his work showing Lackawanna County places will be on exhibit at the Catlin House from June 21 through July 29.

-2017-

of Scranton, lists the names of the deceased in a manner that corresponds with the actual resting places so that visitors can easily locate each grave.

The goal of raising the necessary funds needed for design, construction and installation of the marker is virtually complete. The committee thanks the many individuals and organizations who contributed in various ways towards the successful completion of the project, including the Welsh North American Association.

The Avondale Washburn Remembrance Committee offers our sincere thanks to the Lackawanna Historical Society for their assistance on numerous levels. From offering meeting space, networking opportunities, as well as overall guidance along the way, the Lackawanna Historical Society has played an instrumental role that will help bring the Avondale Washburn Marker Project to a successful completion.

The date and time of the marker dedication will be announced in the near future. All are invited to be in attendance on that day to honor the victims of Avondale.

by: Willis Conover

A continuing look at Scrantons across the country! Stay tuned for more.

Scranton, California

This unincorporated community in the Amargosa Valley in Inyo County of eastern California, near the Nevada border, was the site of a railroad grade and named for Scranton, PA. The stop was in the Death Valley area that became famous for its mining and marketing of "Twenty Mule Team Borax." It was on the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad that ran from Ludlow, California to Beatty, Nevada. Stops were named for associates of Francis Marion Smith, the borax king. At Smith's urging, a group of capitalists from Scranton PA helped finance a company founded to supply water for the mining area centered at Greenwater. Directors of the Ash Meadows Water Company, incorporated in 1906, included Clarence D. Simpson, Lewis A. Watres, G. B. Poore, E. W. Gearhart, and H.H. Brady, all of Scranton. The new town boomed in 1907 but by 1909 the mines played out. The new Scranton never became a major stop on the railroad, but the name remains.

Scranton, Colorado

Railroading and coal mining created a Scranton district in Colorado, just north and east of Denver (in Arapahoe and Adams Counties). In 1886 there was a rail stop and by 1887-1888 a post office. The mining of lignite at Scranton continued briefly, but the quality of coal was low.

The narrow gauge railroad, built by the Denver Land and Railroad Company and called the Colorado Eastern Railroad, connected the Grant Smelter in Denver to the Scranton mines. By 1915 the operation had been abandoned. Any direct link to Scranton, PA has not been established but it is likely the name was selected because the new area was a coal area with railroad access. Scranton investors may have been involved in the enterprise as well.

Scranton, Kansas

This Scranton owes its existence to coal. In 1872 O. H. Sheldon, a successful businessman from nearly Burlingame, set up the Scranton and Burlingame Coal Company and began mining on land he owned a few miles northeast of town. The venture was a success so Sheldon platted a town site which he called Scranton. Sheldon and his wife, Charlotte Smith Sheldon, had lived in Scranton, PA before relocating to Kansas. Supposedly Mrs. Sheldon suggested the name.

The town benefitted from its location on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, making coal shipment easier. Mining at the site expanded as others joined Sheldon and his company in the enterprise. Joseph Drake opened a shaft on the property of H. P. Throop and was joined by his brothers, experienced coal miners from Pennsylvania. The new town's physician was Dr. J. M. Giddings, who has been born in Pittston, PA. By 1877 six shafts were being worked by some 170 miners and the mines were shipping 15 rail cars of coal daily on average. One newspaper referred to Scranton as the "black diamond" of the prairie. Today this Osage County town serves as a "bedroom" community for Topeka and has a population of nearly 600, down from 1,700 in the late 1880's when the mines were most active. (Just a few miles east of Scranton is the former coal town of Carbondale, Iowa.)

Scranton, Michigan

This Ottawa County community gained its name in 1835 when Dr. George Scranton II arrived as the first doctor in the area. A Scranton Post Office opened in 1838. After Dr. Scranton became the chief physician for a group developing a community at Port Sheldon on Lake Michigan, and moved to that location, the town was renamed Eastmanville, for another doctor who moved to the community. Dr. Scranton, born in Connecticut, was a member of the Scranton family that helped give Scranton, PA its name and fame.

There is also a Scranton Mine in Michigan, in Ontonagon County in the western Upper Peninsula. In 1855 Austin Corser discovered silver just north of the Little Iron River, but he waited until 1872 to announce his find and claim the site as a homestead. He then sold the land to a group of Pennsylvania capitalists who formed the Scranton Silver Mining Company headed by Capt. J. Spaulding who worked the mine until 1876 when the boom ended.

Scranton, Minnesota

This community is now a west/northwest section of the city of Hibbing, in the Mesabi Range, the important iron ore mining area northwest of Duluth. In 1904 one of the mines was taken over by the Lackawanna Steel Company of Scranton, PA. The community that grew up around the mine was named for the company's original home. The Scranton name is found throughout the Hibbing area today. Lackawanna Steel shipped its iron ore to its new facility on the shores of Lake Erie, just south of Buffalo, New York.

Scranton, New York

Scranton is a hamlet within the Town of Hamburg in Erie County. The community was named for Scranton PA and was designed for workers who relocated to the area south of Buffalo when the Lackawanna Iron and Steel Company moved in 1902 from Scranton to a location on Lake Erie. Lots were sold in the new community for $120. Before long, Scranton had trolley and rail service, a school, fire hall, store and tavern.

Scranton, Utah

This "historical" mining town, now a ghost town, was located in Tooele County, south of the Great Salt Lake. Founded in 1908 (and abandoned about 1918), the community was named by the mine owners and named for their hometown of Scranton, PA. The New Bullion Mine produced silver, lead and zinc under the ownership of the Scranton Mining and Smelting Company. The officers of that company included Theodore G. Wolf, Henry A. Knapp, and Benjamin H. Troop---all of Scranton, PA.

...Stay tuned for more Scrantons!

Marking Lattimer Massacre's 120th

Join us at the Catlin House on Wednesday, September 6 at 7 pm
as Bill Bachman,
senior instructor of communications
at Penn State Wilkes-Barre, presents a program on the Lattimer Massacre marking its 120th anniversary.

His program will offer the retelling of the tragedy that occurred on September 10, 1897 near Hazleton, PA, which pitted coal company owners, the sheriff of Luzerne County and striking miners against each other, with a deadly outcome. Bachman will lead a discussion on the Lattimer Massacre and how it relates to current topics of our civil liberties, human rights, the justice system and the treatment of immigrant laborers in the U.S. today.
